

Looking for the Traders Edge?

As traders, we are always looking for an edge.

Often times it means that to become better than the “competition” (other traders) we have to do what others won't. That in itself can be an edge.

One idea for an edge is to trade on days that statistically have more price action than other days. This can typically be seen by identifying the daily range for a particular currency pair.

I listed the daily ranges for the GBP/USD 2011.

I can't verify that the highs, lows and daily ranges are 100 percent accurate so please forgive any errors.

You may also have different data as price varies from broker to broker.

This data was taken from FX Pro MT4 charts.

Try to spot the days with the largest price movements.

You could also take this data and dig deeper (a little homework) and match the days up with your favorite economic report for the year of 2011.

You could also determine the average daily range and pick that day to trade.

There is a lot you can do with data, its just up to you if you're willing to take the time to find your edge.

Good luck trading.
